Dearest Miss Weston,

Presuming you will be found at Mr Rathbone's I have directed some letters W. W. Brown is very anxious to send by you, to Greenbank. He was concerned not to have been you, he came home soon after we returned. Our hearts are with you, & we hope all your journey was as smooth as the outset. A great many civilities were exchanged between Mrs Bates & my Father, winding up with an offer of seats in the carriage which Miss Carter took upon herself respectfully to decline.

Ms. A. 7. 3. 55

We all three made our way to University Hall & called on Dr Carpenter, & then to Mr Mackenzie, ^{the lady} who receives boards for the Ladies College, but she is out of town, so we cannot get supply Dr Webb with the needed intelligence.
I had not time to describe the companion ^{of your eyes as} Miss Pugh mentions, I enclose her note which you can look at when on the water. I hope you wont be overlooked in Liverpool, if you see a Mrs Banks (she is a friend of Miss Pugh but I forget whether you know her) please to touch her heart, as we want to persuade her to ^{be} receive ^{the} contributions for the Bazaar. Miss Carter & I have been laying sundry plans for its benefit; & since then my Father has taken me to hold counsel with Mr Tweedie, the publisher, about the Advocate, our way seems opening. Please to think of some useful ends to put it to, & how to procure some correspondents, & interesting matter from America for it.

I have not time for sentences, Mr Brown & my Father are at my side talking over the Stamp & lish question & coherence is impracticable. I am very thankful to have seen you. I am about to write to the B'Killeys now, & you shall hear from us as soon as my Father has seen them, & can say anything definite.

Don't write separate letters to till you have plenty of leisure.
If you announce your safe arrival at home to Mr Webb, he will apprise us of it.

In haste with warmest wishes & love from us both

Your friend

Mary Lettice.

The letter to Miss Parker is written over by this post.

Miss Phelps, sister to Mrs Thayer, is the "lady who" believes in Dr Gannett's book, "may be saved." There is not room for Miss Phelps's letter
